Environmental Medicine in Our Wireless World – Clinical Advances for the Digital Age

Presenters: Stephen Sinatra, MD, FACC – Magda Havas, PhD – Brendan Montano, MD
– Dietrich Klinghardt, MD – Kerry Crofton, PhD and Rob Metzinger
– of the International Advisory Board Doctors for Safer Schools

Many of your patients may be suffering from a new environmental hazard known as electro-pollution. There is scientific evidence of adverse health effects from this electro-magnetic radiation (EMR) exposure, especially the wireless microwave radiation from cell phones, Wi-Fi, cell tower antennas – even baby monitors, hybrid cars and cordless phones. Children, pregnant women and people with electro-sensitivity are most vulnerable. This workshop is for practitioners who want to be effective in diagnosing and treating related conditions, and for specialists in pre-natal care, pediatrics, oncology, cardiology, immunology, neurology, environmental health, anti-aging or energy medicine.

Objectives:

- Why recognizing, treating – and preventing – EMR toxicity is the core of anti-aging, longevity and preventative medicine.
- What scientific studies document about the adverse biological and psychological effects.
- Why children and pregnant women are most at risk and protective measures.
- The emerging condition electro-hypersensitivity (EHS), or rapid aging syndrome (RAS).
- New information on other related medical conditions, and detailed clinical approaches.
- Effective diagnostic and treatment strategies.
- How to reduce EMR exposure and related risks in our living and working environments and schools, including our concern about Wi-Fi in schools and details on the safer-tech solutions.
